MUSIC REVIEW: CALLIOPE'S CALL

Concert features refreshing pieces in art song genre

By Peter Jacobi

H-T Reviewer | pjacobi@heraldt.com

Megan Roth is a mezzo-soprano who dotes on art songs. She's so wrapped up in them that she's founded Calliope's Call, a concert-oriented entity designed, she says, "to instill an appreciation and love for the art song genre by offering affordable, high quality performances that showcase this rich and vast field, with works by traditional to contemporary composers performed by world class artists."

Well, Calliope's Call gave its first concert Saturday evening in Bloomington's Unitarian Universalist Church. An Indianapolis follow-up scheduled for Sunday afternoon was postponed because of weather. But Megan Roth's project is well underway. There she was up front in the sanctuary with three fellow musicians: baritone Scott Hogsed, who's had a distinguished opera and oratorio career and now operates out of his current home in Bloomington; Kim Pokin Lee, a Chicago-based soprano cajoled by friend Roth to come down for the christening, and Paul Pisano, a pianist and vocal coach with duties in the Indiana University Jacobs School of Music.

Their program gave substance to the promise, featuring songs ranging from Robert Schumann to current-day composer of operas and songs, Jake Heggie. The theme for the event centered on "Child's Play: Songs for and about Children." John Duke's "Five Lewis Carroll Poems" served to open the concert. No Schubertian soul-searching here; these pieces — refreshingly sung by Roth — float on air and amuse, reflecting their whimsical subject matter: "The Lobster Quadrille," "Jabberwocky," "The Little Crocodile," "The Mock Turtle's Song," and "The Duchess' Lullaby."

Following the American Duke were delights by his more famous French contemporary, Francis Poulenc, "Quatre Chansons pour Enfants" ("Four Songs for Children") that tripped across the tongue of soprano Lee. They're like patter songs and deal with greedy children unsatisfied with their Christmas gifts. "We want a little sister" go the words, "round and chubby-beaked like a ball, with a mischievous little nose, with blond hair, with kiss-me lips. We want a little sister."

Jake Heggie's "Songs to the Moon, Part I: Fairy Tales for the Children" gained Roth's attention; songs they are of greater emotional variety though still fantastical in nature, being set to poems by Vachel Lindsay about "The Haughty Snail-King," "What the Rattlesnake Said," and "The Moon's the North Wind's Cooky." Roth's appropriately dramatic approach made one think, as would a child, that here was music of grand topical consequence.

Charles Ives nostalgia — "The Greatest Man," "The Children's Hour," and "The Circus Band" — gave baritone Hogsed an interpretive playground, and play he did. Lee added Leonard Bernstein's brief and brittle cycle "I hate music!"

And all three contributed to singing a dozen selections from Schumann's "Liederalbum fur die Jungen." The music is delightful. The singing was marked by honest belief on the part of the vocalists in these charming songs.

Pianist Pisano proved more than an accompanist; he was, throughout, an equal as colleague. All in all, an auspicious start for Calliope's Call.

Two recommendations: (1) When you speak about the music, speak louder and more distinctly or use amplification, and (2) Along with providing words to songs in other languages, broaden that by also supplying the words to songs in English; it's a difficult language to project, particularly for female voices, and so, many words get lost, which is a shame.
